Food and fuel deflation

What happened

Inflation in August posted +0.08%, coming below the median of market expectation (+0.16%). In the last 12 months, it accumulated 3.22%.

We highlight the food deflation (-0.17%) mainly driven by Food at Home (-0.45%) of which we highlight the price drop of tomato (-14.8%), potato (-15.1%), vegetables (-6.3%) and bean (-5.6%). We also highlight the deflation of transport (gasoline -1.9%, ethanol -1.1% and airfare -15.6%) followed by Health and Personal Care due to toiletries (-1.8%). On the hike side, the main pressure came from Housing being driven by electric energy (+4.9%) with the switch of tariff flag to red level 1 from yellow.

Our expectation

IPCA in August might come at levels near 0%, with chances to show some deflation mainly driven by further Food deflation on consumer side, as anticipated by the significant decrease of agricultural producer prices shown by the IGPs indices. Additionally, Transport group due to fuel and airfare as well as Health and Personal Care group with further decrease of toiletries might completely or more than offset the impact of electric energy prices in the wake of switch of tariff flag to red level 1 from yellow, which has total impact on IPCA by 0.14 percentage points.

This lower-than-expected inflation in August sets a downward bias for our IPCA call for this whole year at 4%. Furthermore, the current excessive idle capacity of the economy (industrial idle capacity and high unemployment rate) inhibits a pass-through of recent BRL depreciation to prices. Note on the right-hand side chart above that core inflation measures in the last 12 months is also at moderate levels. This situation coupled with well-anchored inflation expectation around the inflation targets set for next years as well as high confidence on approval of pension reform open scope for further Selic rate cuts (50bps cuts on September and also on October Copom meetings) with Selic ending up this year at 5%.
